Port Denarau Marina Opens New Border Police Office and Expanded Jetty E Page 1 of 2

PORT DENARAU, FIJI — Port Denarau Marina celebrated two key milestones today with the official opening of its new Border Police Office and of an expanded commercial capacity through the reconfigured Arm Jetty E.

Fiji Police Force Commissioner Rusiate Tudravu officiated the ceremony, marking a stronger partnership between law enforcement and Fiji's marine tourism sector.

As one of Fiji's main ports of entry, the marina welcomes thousands of international travelers every year. The new Border Police Office gives the Fiji Police Force and border control teams a dedicated on-site base, strengthening border security and streamlining entry for arriving visitors.

Alongside the police facility, the reconfigured Arm Jetty E increases berth space for commercial vessels. The expansion will help local operators meet rising demand, create new business opportunities, and support Fiji's economy through increased maritime traffic.

Speaking at the opening, Port Denarau Marina CEO, Cynthia Rasch stated:

"Security and tourism go hand in hand. Visitors want to know they are arriving at a destination that is well managed, safe, and professional. Today's opening reinforces that confidence and reflects the strong partnership between government agencies and the private sector in protecting our borders while delivering an outstanding visitor experience."

The upgrades were delivered in partnership with the Fiji Police Force, government agencies, contractors, and marina personnel.
